A Yamaha street machine means more technological sophistication. More economical to maintain. More reliability. And, now, it means more motorcycle for less money. Your Yamaha dealer is offering special spring savings on three 1975 street motorcycles.

These machines—the RD 125, 200 and 250—have been modeled after the legendary Yamaha RD 350. Each one has street bike features with a roadracer heritage. The two-stroke twin, high performance Yamaha engines are fed by Torque Induction for excellent low-end pulling power. Each is oil-injected by an Autolube system. And each is very economical.

Light and easy handling, these Yamahas have adjustable rear shocks. Each one also features a large sealed-beam headlight with complete street instrumentation. The RD 200 has a push-button electric starter. And the RD 250 is equipped with a front disc brake and a six-speed close-ratio transmission.

Yamaha's technically-superior features have always been a strong temptation. Now at their new low prices, these street machines should be completely irresistible.
